

FITR / KCTL

Please join us for a Winter Workshop jointly sponsored by FITR and KCTL:

TEACHING AT THE CROSSROADS:

Academic Literacy and Culturally Responsive Instruction

Teaching at the Crossroads: Academic Literacy and Culturally Responsive Instruction

During this workshop participants will examine the intersections of reading-related pedagogies and culturally responsive teaching practices. Participants will work through the challenges and opportunities for applying these approaches and consider practical starting points for redesigning their own courses and assignments to better incorporate reading-related and culturally responsive pedagogies.

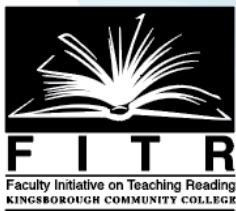

Thursday, February 7
12:00 - 4:00pm
Tapestry Room A212

This workshop will be facilitated by Dr. Jeanine L. Williams, Professor and Program Chair of Written Communication at the University of Maryland, University College

Lunch will be served.

For further information on FITR, please contact: Libby Garland, Laura Kates, or Emily Schnee

Bio Dr. Jeanine L. Williams is Professor and Program Chair of Written Communication at the University of Maryland University College. She holds a Ph.D. in Language, Literacy, and Culture from the University of Maryland, Baltimore County and has over a decade of experience teaching developmental reading and writing. Dr. Williams has published and presented nationally on integrated reading and writing, critical literacy and other non-traditional approaches to postsecondary literacy instruction.