What is Assessment?

Assessment is the systematic collection, review, and use of information about academic programs and administrative and educational support services (AES units) undertaken for the purpose of improving student outcomes.

Source: Assessment 101. CUNY Assessment Council.

Assessment asks:

What are we trying to accomplish and why?

How well have we succeeded?

Where might improvements be made?

Action Plans from Assessments:

Course	Results	Actions/Next Steps
MUS 31: Identify, analyze, and define the considerations and skills necessary to the creative process of music-making (ILO 2)	20 of 30 students demonstrated proficiency in this area	Discussions revealed that providing scaffolding for students on the critical listening activity improved student performance, leading to higher learning outcomes achievement
CHEM1100: Gather, organize, analyze, and interpret chemical data and present it in an effective written laboratory report (ILO 3)	The largest number of students struggled with the third component, interprets information	Discussed changing how questions are written in the lab reports to provide scaffolding and support to students in knowing how to interpret the results
HS4000: Define and then contrast the terms of drug use, drug misuse, and abuse (ILO 5)	86% of students demonstrated proficiency in this area	Students struggled with the difference between misuse and abuse . Faculty will work to clarify and communicate this distinction

 2. How well are they doing?
 3. Where can improvements be made?
